

CONCEPT TRAINING

Dogs are like kids. They come with their own ideas and their own personalities. As parents to children, we try to teach them right from wrong, good from bad, and other concepts that we hope they will then use to make good life choices as they grow and long into adulthood.

Some kids are more confident than others, some are naturally sunny and positive while others are more prone to worry. We do our best to help them through any situation with encouragement and understanding and let them discover and learn about the world at their own pace.

Growing a dog is much the same. We teach them concepts to help them deal with whatever life throws their way. A naturally worried and anxious dog may bark at people or other dogs as a reaction to their emotions. They are not trying to give you a hard time, they are having a hard time and are dealing with it the only way they know how. Our job as dog parents is to teach them how to deal with the things they will encounter in life and encourage them in the process.

How do we do this? We play games! Short, daily sessions played in 3-minute intervals help train your dog FOR any situation that may arise, rather than trying to help them cope IN the situation. We don't expect our 2nd graders to sit down for a high school level math test that they are not ready for, so we should not expect our dogs to know how to do things before they have been taught those lessons and concepts. We want to set them up for success!

There are a wide array of concepts your dog can learn. Some of these are Calmness, Flexibility, Proximity, Tolerance of Frustration, and many more! We can help you discover which concepts your dog needs help building and set up your training plan accordingly. We are here to help you and your dog succeed in your life together. We can't wait to get started on your dog training journey!
